

Alex Shevchenko is a co-founder of Grammarly and a member of the Superhuman board. He currently focuses on product strategy and product innovation as a member of Superhuman's Core Product team.

Alex finds inspiration in watching Superhuman team members grow, thrive, and become experts in their respective fields. Prior to co-founding Grammarly, he was involved in creating MyDropBox, a plagiarism detection company that grew to serve over 2 million students in two years before being acquired by Blackboard Inc.

He holds a BBA from the International University in Vienna, Austria, and an MBA from the University of Toronto School of Management.
